THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS
THE EPISTLE
TO THE HEBREWS
AN HISTORICAL AND THEOLOGICAL RECONSIDERATION
THE BAIRD LECTURE, 1949

BY WILLIAM MANSON
B.A. (Oxon), D.D. (Knox College, Toronto), D.D. (Glasgow)
Professor of Biblical Criticism in the University of Edinburgh

HODDER AND STOUGHTON LTD.
WARWICK SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.4
PREFACE

The present volume incorporates a series of lectures undertaken at the invitation of the Baird Lectureship Trustees, and delivered in the Martin Hall, New College, Edinburgh, in February 1950. I desire cordially to thank the Trustees for the honour conferred on me by the invitation and for their consent to my request under stress of other duties to defer the delivery of the lectures from the autumn of 1949 to the following spring. I wish also to acknowledge the kindness of the Principal and Senate of New College in making the Martin Hall available at the time.

The reasons which have led me to undertake a reconsideration of the purpose of the Epistle are stated in some detail in the opening chapter of the book. As a New Testament teacher I have for long been dissatisfied with the direction which critical thought, principally associated for us in this country and the English-speaking world with the names of two distinguished scholars, Professor James Moffatt and Professor E. F. Scott, has taken with regard to Hebrews during the last half-century. Whereas the older criticism understood the Epistle to reflect a phase or crisis in the evolution of Jewish Christianity in the apostolic period, the modern theory has unhitched the Epistle from these moorings and floated it out into the mid-stream of the general life of the first-century Church, so taking it out of a supposed backwater to give it a place in the main current of Christian history. On this interpretation the religious situation of the community addressed in Hebrews had nothing specifically to do with any attraction exercised by Judaism but was determined by some form of secular drift to irreligion or to paganism.

I cannot conceal the conviction that this right-about-face in critical opinion has involved a turning of the back on some of the most salient features of the Epistle, and has therefore brought about a clouding of the issues. The new theory starts not from the central substance of Hebrews but, as it seems to me, from peripheral features and from a number of a priori and not sufficiently examined assumptions regarding both Judaism and Christianity in the apostolic age. I cannot therefore think that it makes real contact with history. Indeed neither the older nor the more recent approach to the problem of Hebrews has sufficiently integrated the Epistle into the historical development of the world-mission of Christianity or brought the situation behind the letter into clear and adequate focus.

In this opinion I have become confirmed by considerations based on a fresh study of the Stephen-records in the book of the Acts of the Apostles. I am convinced that a straight line runs from the teaching and apologia of the proto-martyr to the Epistle to the Hebrews, and I believe it is to be regarded as a central line in the development of the Christian world-mission. In the present book, therefore, I have sought an approach to Hebrews which will (1) integrate the Epistle afresh into the history of the world-mission from its inception in Stephen, (2) re-evaluate the potentialities of the religious situation in such a centre of world-mission Christianity as Rome, (3) trace the connection between the doctrine of Hebrews and the theology of the world-mission as a whole, and (4) from careful study of the argument of the Epistle, establish conclusions as to the situation and character of the community addressed and so recover for the Epistle its organic position in relation to first-century evangelism and life.

It is not necessary here to set out in detail the positions to which I have been led. They are indicated in outline in the closing section of Chapter I, in the summaries which conclude Chapters III and V, and in Chapter VI. The historical ground of the approach is set out in Chapter II, which deals with Stephen and his eschatology; here is indeed the pivot on which my whole argument turns. I have come to see that distinctions of a very important order have to be made within the field of the Early Christian eschatology, and that the stand taken by Stephen has been determinative of Christian theology to its furthest bounds. I have not, however, in the exposition of the relevant material of Hebrews which is undertaken in Chapters III-V attempted anything like a full commentary on the Epistle, but have confined myself to the points which bear on the above critical issues. There is, therefore, no wealth of side-reference to learned works on the more general aspects of the teaching. For myself the results of the particular inquiry on which I have concentrated attention have been to broaden the outlook both on the history—Hebrews is no mere academic treatise—and on the theology of the world-mission of Christianity in the New Testament age. If my construction of the facts is disallowed, I shall look to see it refuted; if it is defective, I trust it will be improved; if it should be thought right, I hope that even within its limits it may help at certain important points to put Christian doctrine more squarely on the foundation of Christian history, and to show it, as I say at the end of the book, rising phoenix-like from the embers not only of Jewish legalism but of the Jewish means of grace.

W. MANSON.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH,
1st September 1950.

NOTE ON TRANSLATIONS

The rendering of the Epistle is from the author's own translation, and the same holds of passages cited from the Septuagint and other ancient texts, including verse renderings from Greek poets.
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>PREFACE</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>v</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER I

THE PROBLEM OF THE EPISTLE AND MODERN CRITICAL THOUGHT 1

- Literary, Historical, and Theological Aspects of the Problem 3
- Purpose of the Present Work 8
- Traditional and Older Approaches to the Subject 10
- The Modern Volte-Face in Criticism 16
- Criticism of the Modern Theory 18
- Provisional Statement of Positions advanced in the Present Work 23

CHAPTER II

STEPHEN AND THE WORLD-MISSION OF CHRISTIANITY 25

- Stephen 27
- The Eschatology of Stephen 30
- The Apologia of Stephen and the Epistle to the Hebrews 36
- The Rise of the Christian World-Mission 37
- Divisive Issues created by the World-Mission 42
CHAPTER III

THE ADMONITORY SECTIONS OF THE EPISTLE.—THE

ESCHATOLOGICAL LIFE

The Word of Jesus and the Word of the Angels  48

The Heavenly Calling of Christians and the Eschatological Now  52

Various Warnings relating to the Crisis  56

Advancing from First-Principles to the Full Knowledge of the Christian Mystery  59

The Consecrated Way  65

A Reminiscence and an Assurance.—The Advent of Christ  71

The Nature and Function of Faith  73

The Cloud of Witnesses  81

Other Exhortations  84

Conclusions from Chapter III  86

CHAPTER IV

THE THEOLOGICAL ARGUMENT OF THE EPISTLE.—

I. THE PERSON AND OFFICE OF THE REDEEMER  88

The Finality of the Christian Revelation  88

The Significance of Christ.—The Wisdom Christ-

ology  90

The Incarnation in Relation to Man, Suffering, and Sin  98

Jesus Hero and Priest  102
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Priest by Predestination and Incarnate Qualification</td>
<td>106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priest after the Order of Melchizedek.—Priest of the Resurrection</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Psalm CX</td>
<td>117</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER V

The Theological Argument of the Epistle.—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>II. The Oblation of the Body of Christ</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priest in the Heavenly Sanctuary</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The New Covenant</td>
<td>127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Old and the New Sanctuaries and their Atonement-Provisions</td>
<td>130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priest through the Eternal Spirit</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mediator of the New Covenant</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Offering of the Body of Christ</td>
<td>143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The New Christian Approach to God</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Christian Altar</td>
<td>149</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Note on the Holy Communion in the Church</td>
<td>155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusions from Chapters IV and V</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER VI

The Place of the Epistle in Early Christian History and in the New Testament

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Minority Group in the Church at Rome</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resistance unto Blood.—The Question of the Date of Hebrews</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Writer of the Epistle</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Character of the Church at Rome.—St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans . . . . . . 172
The Epistle to the Hebrews and the Old Testament 184
The Epistle to the Hebrews and the Evangelical Tradition . . . . . . . . . 187
The Epistle to the Hebrews and St. Paul . . . 192
Epilogue . . . . . . . . . . . . 197
Index . . . . . . . . . . . . . . 199
The Epistle to the Hebrews is one of the books in the New Testament. Its author is not known. The primary purpose of the Letter to the Hebrews is to exhort Christians to persevere in the face of persecution. The central thought of the entire Epistle is the doctrine of the Person of Christ and his role as mediator between God and humanity. No author is internally named. The epistle casts Jesus as both exalted Son and high priest, a unique dual Christology. Scholars argue over where Hebrews fits in the 1st century world. Despite numerous publications on this epistle, scholarly discussion has failed to yield a definitive consensus on most issues. One author says conclusions on most questions, including the one concerning authorship, should be avoided. The Letter to the Hebrews provides the epistle readings during Great Lent for a very simple reason. The Letter to the Hebrews is attributed, traditionally, to St. Paul; however, scholars will tell us that it doesn’t seem too likely that St. Paul wrote this letter, which even is more like a treatise than a letter, by his own hand. However, it would definitely be the teaching of our Church tradition, that this letter or this treatise comes from Paul, comes from the teaching of Paul, comes from the company of Paul. But in this Letter to the Hebrews, you have also this question that has to be answered. There is no more Temple. The Temple has been destroyed.