

It brings together historical data and arguments from different societies in order to show how interconnected the world was, even before the onset of modern globalization. The author demonstrates how events in Asia, Africa and South America, from the decline of the 18th-century Islamic empires to the anti-European Boxer rebellion of 1900 in China, had a direct impact on European and American history.