Concepts And Strategies In New Drug Development

Peter U Nwangwu

When developing a new drug, the chemistry, manufacturing, and control (CMC) strategy should involve a systematic drug substance characterization upfront to understand the molecule, its material properties, physical and chemical stability issues, and addressing these early in a phase-appropriate formulation development strategy. When referring to this article, please cite it as A. Siew, "Formulation Strategies in Early-Stage Drug Development," Pharmaceutical Technology 41 (10) 20–27 (2017). Recommended Reading. Designing Optimized Formulations.