famine of 1958-61 in China. In the Soviet Union there were several man-made famines that killed millions, blamed on the collectivist policies of Stalin, the leader of the country at the time. Famines have a history of bringing out the worst in people, including atrocities and cannibalism. Another of the deadliest natural disasters is epidemics, most notably the Spanish flu of 1918-1919, which killed 50 million more than World War I, which had occurred just before. This also causes a spiraling effect, which gains momentum the more condensation it collects. Natural disaster management continues long after the initial crisis has passed. Funds, for example, may be allocated to rebuild homes destroyed by a flood.

1. Recommended. What causes famine? There has been a dramatic decline in famines in the last 50 years. So why are we seeing famine and near-famine conditions now? The World Peace Institute recently released a statement on ending famine that summarizes current trends as resulting from military actions and exclusionary, authoritarian politics conducted without regard to the wellbeing or even the survival of people. The situation in Somalia is compounded by climate change and the effects of long-term conflict, which continues to make it difficult to get help to some of the hardest-hit communities. If we wait to respond until a famine is declared, it's too late.

Causes of Overgrazing. Lack of proper animal/wildlife management. The lack of proper animal and wildlife feeding management on the available pasture is the leading cause of overgrazing. Effects of Overgrazing. Soil erosion. The continued trampling of numerous animals in an average forage land will act to accelerate the death of plants and vegetation cover. Land use management involves the proper assessment of various land uses and the implications of human activities on land. Local and regional factors such as aridity and rainfall patterns also have to be considered before any land development or exploitation implementations are undertaken.
