Particularly challenging for low- to moderate-income homebuyers, purchasing a home means coming up with ample cash funds to cover down payment and closing costs, make any necessary repairs or updates to the home to make it your own, such as new flooring and paint, and a variety of other varied expenses. Naturally, low- to moderate-income buyers often don’t have the means to build up substantial cash reserves to cover these costs, at least not without years of pre-planning and savings. But that doesn’t mean the dream of home ownership is out of reach.
