We are Prisoners of Our Own Experience. If you want to innovate, you have to break out of the box. They can quite easily tell you why they like or don’t like some existing thing, but they can rarely imagine or articulate a radically different solution. So customers usually say things like, “Make it faster,” “Make it cheaper,” or “Make it easier to buy or use,” rather than, “What I want is something that solves my problem in a completely different way.”

We Know What We Want, When We See It. The problem is we don’t know what that completely different way is, until we see it. Via The Four Lenses of Innovation. If you want to change the game, just ask people what they want and explore the art of the possible. Innovate with your customers, but don’t wait for them to tell you what to do. You Might Also Like. Design is what links creativity and innovation. It shapes ideas to become practical and attractive propositions for users or customers. Design may be described as creativity deployed to a specific end.

The Cox Review. The question therefore isn't so much 'what is design and why does it matter?' but 'how can I use good design to make the world around me better?' How is design different from other activities? In fact, it's often said that designers just think and then translate those thoughts into tangible form, they actually think through making things. This ability to make new ideas real from an early stage in developing products or services means that they have a greater chance of becoming successful more quickly. Here’s why it’s not okay for us to say it, no matter what Black folks are doing: 1. We Lost the Privilege. You know that whole 600 year period when White Europeans were buying and selling Black Africans as chattel? And remember how that whole system was enforced by a violent system of repression whereby Black slaves who did not act the way the White folks wanted them to were beaten and murdered? Oh, and remember that time after slavery when Black people were locked in a system called Jim Crow that used a similar fear of violence and repression to keep Black people in their place? Well,
