Soldiers and civilians on both sides of the conflict sang it, identifying with the feeling of joy that was anticipated with the end of the fighting and the return of loved ones to their homes. The first printed sheet music for the song credits the words and music to Louis Lambert, which was determined later to be a pen name for Patrick S. Gilmore. Gilmore claimed to have learned the tune for When Johnny Comes Marching Home from an unidentified African American singer and that it was a traditional African American melody. The Irish-sounding melody and Gilmore’s background lead many to discredit this claim, but no definitive evidence of the tune’s origin has been discovered. It is possible that he adapted the melody from a traditional Irish folk song.
