Not all children's books are meant solely for children. In fact, some of the best examples are just as intriguing and engaging for adults as for kids. The fact is, plenty of books ostensibly considered for children are sophisticated enough for adults, and the best children’s books are written with a Pixar-like dual focus on both entertaining kids and keeping the adults who might be reading the book to them interested. To prove the point, here are ten classic books supposedly for children that adults can enjoy just as much, if not more.

1. The Very Hungry Caterpillar by Eric Carle (1969). Educating children about days of the week, types of foods, and the lifecycle of a butterfly, Carle’s book has also been endorsed by the Royal Etymological Society. Click to Buy: The Very Hungry Caterpillar ($7).

2. Where the Wild Things Are by Maurice Sendak (1963). Age Range: 2-6 years. Regarded as one of the best-selling children’s books of all time and adapted into animation and film, Theodor Geisel wrote and illustrated The Cat in the Hat under the pen name of Dr. Seuss. This children’s story revolves around an anthropomorphic cat who shows up at Sally’s house, makes a mess while entertaining her and her brother and cleans up with the help of his friends, Thing 1 and Thing 2 just before Sally’s mother comes home. Click to Buy: The Cat in the Hat ($7.27).

3. The Cat in the Hat by Dr. Seuss (1957). Where the Wild Things Are is by Maurice Sendak (1963). Age Range: 2-6 years. Regarded as one of the best-selling children’s books of all time and adapted into animation and film, Theodor Geisel wrote and illustrated The Cat in the Hat under the pen name of Dr. Seuss. 4. The best children’s books are better than any toy, film or TV show. For the very young, books are simpler and more magical than any other gift they could yearn for. And the best books not only help young readers understand themselves and the world better, but make them giggle, think, worry, consider, and engage all their other feelings, too. This is no easy trick, but it feels natural when a book pulls it off with grace. And there have been dozens of releases this year that do just that. Below, then are our favorite children’s books of the year, aimed at kids aged 2-7 years old. These are books that made us and our kids laugh, think, dream, wonder, feel calm, and forget about the real world for a time. Take a look. ADVERTISEMENT.
