Stands-And Falls-In the New World Order
China has banned millions of people from any number of activities for being labeled as 'untrustworthy' on the country's Orwellian social credit system. Banned from things such as air and train travel, blacklisted individuals are being punished in a broad effort to boost "trustworthiness" among the 1.4 billion Chinese citizens tracked by the massive system - which assigns both positive and negative scores to various metrics, reports SCMP.

This includes North America, Latin America and the Caribbean, Europe, Africa and the Middle-East, Asia, and Oceania and the South Pacific. Indeed, Julie and I believe that we have a pretty extensive survey of such waterfalls, but we recognize that this list can change as we continue to collect more waterfall sightings from around the world. So without further ado, we present our list of the World's 10 Best Waterfalls in reverse order:

10. Sutherland Falls. Fiordland National Park, New Zealand. As one of many highlights of the Milford Track "proclaimed as one of the finest walks in the world" it sat in one of New Zealand's most scenic spots. Indeed, this waterfall had a lot going for it, and we just had to make room for it on this list. Visit this waterfall.
