Christians think of Jesus Christ as a teacher, a role model, and someone who revealed who the Christian God was. Just like Judaism and Islam, Christianity is an Abrahamic religion.[5][6] Christianity started out as a Jewish sect[7][8] in the eastern Mediterranean. It quickly grew in number of believers and influence over a few decades, and by the 4th Century it had become the dominant religion in the Roman Empire. The most basic part of Christianity is the belief in Jesus as the Son of God and Messiah (Christ). The title "Messiah" comes from the Hebrew word מָשִׁיחַ (mAshiáḥ) meaning anointed one. The Greek translation Χριστός (Christos) is the source of the English word "Christ". Joshua is English for the Hebrew word Yeshua. Christians can use the Stations of the Cross as the basis for a structured meditation on the last hours of Christ's life. The Via Crucis (Way of the Cross) takes the faithful on a journey through the final stages of the Passion, as explained in this Roman Catholic guidance note. Two 13th century German passion plays are known, and Passion plays were more popular during that century and the one that followed. The Passion of Christ was also portrayed in the English 'cycle plays'. Passion plays often give a detailed portrayal of Christ's physical suffering and many of them include explicit dramatisations of the beating and execution of Christ. "Christianity - the Original and the Present Reality" is a brief treatise in which the author has attempted to open the Christians' eyes to the true reality of their erroneous beliefs and to guide them to the Truth. All the Messengers of Allâh had tried their best, to convey the correct creed to their peoples. Prophet â€œIsa, or Jesus, was also among those upright Messengers who strove hard to guide his people to the Truth, but most of them followed their whims and desires and thus went astray. Believing in the Oneness of Allâh is a basic fundamental in Islam. This belief establishes the relation...
